Lobbying and Political Activities of Tax-Exempt Organizations

* Copyright © 1989 by Harvey P. Dale. All rights reserved.
May 14, 1989 Lobbying and Political Activities of Tax-Exempt Organizations

LOYBING AND POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS

Table of Contents

Introduction and Scope ........................................ 1
Conceptual Issues ............................................... 2
Selected Historical Trail Markers ........................... 4
The § 501(h) Regulations ..................................... 7
1987 Legislation - "OBRA" .................................. 8
  Introduction ................................................ 8
  Disclosure Requirements ................................. 10
  Modification and Clarification of Rules ............. 29
Concluding Observations .................................... 46
LOBBYING AND POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS

I. Introduction and Scope:

A. The Code provides that an entity may qualify as a § 501(c)(3)1 organization only if:

   "no substantial part of [its] activities ... is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation, (except as otherwise provided in subsection (h)), and [it] does not participate in, or intervene in (including the publishing or distributing of statements), any political campaign on behalf of (or in opposition to) any candidate for public office." § 501(c)(3).

See also Treas. Reg. § 1.501(c)(3)-1(c)(3); B. HOPKINS, THE LAW OF TAX EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS chs. 13 and 14 (5th ed. 1987). This reflects a long-standing Congressional judgment that the double federal tax benefits of deductions for contributions to, and exempt status for, the organization should be denied with respect to political and substantial lobbying activities by these organizations. Subcomm. on Oversight of the House Ways and Means Comm., 100th Cong., 1st Sess., Report and Recommendations on Lobbying and Political Activities by Tax-Exempt Organizations 37 (Comm. Print 100-12 June 8, 1987).

B. A fairly comprehensive bibliography is provided starting at page 47, below. This outline is thus "tilted" towards discussions of the issues which have not been the subject of extensive written analysis. Reference should be made to the items cited in the bibliography for additional commentary and analyses.

* Copyright © 1989 by Harvey P. Dale. All rights reserved.

1. Except as otherwise noted, all citations are to the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended, and the Treasury Regulations promulgated under it.
C. This outline begins with a brief discussion of some conceptual issues (at ¶ II, p. 2, below). It then provides a brief history of the development of the current state of the law with respect to lobbying and political activities of charitable organizations (at ¶ III, p. 4, below). It next turns to a very brief analysis of the background to the current form of the proposed regulations under § 501(h) (at ¶ IV, p. 7, below), followed by a more detailed description of the 1987 legislation affecting these questions (at ¶ V, p. 8, below). A few concluding comments appear at ¶ VI, p. 46, below.

II. Conceptual Issues:

A. The law here, as is often the case, has developed in fits and starts, as a result of legislation, regulations, and court decisions typically directed at particular instances of perceived abuses. It is not characterized by any overall coherent policy. Thus, history is extremely important (and a brief description of some of the more crucial historical developments is provided, at ¶ III, below).

B. To perceive the legal landscape more clearly, it is useful to make distinctions among two sets of concepts:

1. The types of legal "persons" to which the rules are addressed, and

2. The types of activities which are the focus of the rules.

The rules treat differently four types of "persons" and three types of activities (as discussed at ¶¶ II.C and II.D below). These could be thought of as forming a grid, or decision table, with types of persons listed in separate rows and types of activities in separate columns, thus forming a 4-by-3 matrix of intersections (or boxes, or cells). A legal rule would then fall into each such intersection (or box or cell), and by looking at the resulting matrix one could get an overall perspective on the pattern (or lack of pattern) of the relevant rules. This outline does not attempt to provide all of such rules, but rather focusses only on selected intersections.

C. Distinctions among four types of "persons" may be relevant:

1. Business taxpayers (typically but not always corporations);

2. Non-business taxpayers (typically individuals);

3. Tax-exempt organizations;² and

4. Political organizations (as defined in § 527(e)).

D. Distinctions among three types of activities may be relevant:

1. Political campaign activities: activities aimed at influencing the election of candidates for public office.

2. Lobbying activities: activities aimed at influencing, by direct contact, legislators or other public officials in the exercise of their authority, e.g., to vote a particular way on pending legislation.

². Tax-exempt organizations technically are "taxpayers" within the meaning of § 7701(a)(14). Rev. Rul. 67-173, 1967-1 C.B. 101; Forrest City Production Credit Ass'n, 300 F. Supp. 609 (E.D. Ark. 1969), aff'd per curiam, 426 F.2d 819 (8th Cir. 1970). However, they are not, in general, liable for income tax on their net income, and have been treated differently, for purposes of lobbying and political activities, from persons which are so liable.

3. Grassroots lobbying activities: activities aimed at influencing, indirectly, by contact with constituents, legislators, or other public officials in the exercise of their authority.

Political campaign activities aim at influencing the election of candidates, whereas lobbying activities aim at influencing the conduct of already-elected public officials. Ordinary (or direct) lobbying involves contact with legislators and other public officials empowered to vote or act on laws and legislation, whereas grassroots lobbying involves indirect attempts to influence the same conduct by contacts with constituents rather than the legislators or public officials themselves.

E. The above distinctions may be found helpful by some, but are clearly neither the only relevant differences nor the only way in which to organize or understand the legal regime.

III. Selected Historical Trail Markers:

A. Prior to 1934, there were no restrictions in the Code affecting political-campaign or lobbying activities by tax-exempt organizations. Quite early on, however, the IRS, had indicated that organizations disseminating partisan propaganda could not qualify as "educational" within the meaning of the predecessor to current 501(c)(3). Treas. Regs. 45, Art. 517 (1919).

B. In Slee v. Commissioner, 42 F.2d 184 (2d Cir. 1930) (charitable deduction denied for contributions to organization primarily engaged in lobbying activities), Judge Learned Hand, in an often-quoted portion of the opinion, said that "[p]olitical agitation [activities] . . . must be conducted without public subvention; the Treasury stands aside from them." Id. at 185. This language seemed to apply generally to all charitable organizations, not merely "educational" ones, and the opinion was so cited in later decisions.

C. The Revenue Act of 1934, Pub. L. 73-216, amended the predecessor to current § 501(c)(3) so that an organization would only qualify if "no substantial part of [its] activities . . . [constitutes] carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation." Note that an insubstantial amount of such activity was not fatal. This limitation is typically referred to as involving "lobbying." The relevant portion of the 1934 legislation was added in the Senate as a floor amendment, aimed at curbing one specific organization (the National Economy League), and was not, according to its sponsor, intended to restrict legislative activities of other "worthy institutions." 78 CONG. REC. 5861 (1934) (remarks of Senator Reed). See Thompson, The Availability of the Federal Tax Exemption for Propaganda Organizations, 18 U.C. DAVIS L. REV. 487, 502 n. 33 (1985).

D. The Internal Revenue Code of 1954 added a further restriction: § 501(c)(3) organizations were forbidden to intervene in support of any candidate "in any political campaign." Unlike the language dealing with lobbying, this new prohibition allowed no leeway even for insubstantial activity. This limitation is typically referred to as involving "political campaign activity."

E. Prior to 1962, Treasury had, by regulation, denied business deductions to taxpayers for lobbying expenses. This was held to be constitutional in Cammarano v. United States, 358 U.S. 498 (1959).

F. In 1962, Congress enacted § 162(c)(2), generally permitting a business deduction for lobbying expenses directly affecting the taxpayer's business. § 162(e)(2)(B), however, denies deductions for attempts to influence the general public on legislative matters. This limitation is typically referred to as involving "grassroots lobbying," and is so labelled in the regulations. Treas. Reg. § 1.162-20(c)(4).

G. As part of the Tax Reform Act of 1969, which subjected private foundations to a newly-crafted and quite rigorous regulatory regime, Congress added § 4945(d)(1), imposing an excise tax on grassroots lobbying expenditures by a private foundation. Exceptions were included for nonpartisan analyses, lobbying in self-defense, and providing technical information on request. § 4945(e)(2).

H. In 1976, Congressional dissatisfaction with the lobbying restrictions on public charities led to the enactment of §§ 501(h) and 4911. Tax Reform Act of 1976, Pub. L. 94-455, § 1307, 90 Stat. 1720. These provided an elective regime in which – in lieu of the more vague substantiality standard – electing charities could choose a mathematical test, and be liable only for an excise tax (rather than capital punishment) for "excess lobbying expenditures."

I. In 1980, regulations were proposed under §§ 162(e) and 4945. 45 Fed. Reg. 78167 (November 25, 1980). They represented the first proposal with respect to § 162(e), and amended the prior (1972) proposals with respect to § 4945.

J. In 1983, the Supreme Court unanimously sustained the constitutional validity of the Code's lobbying restrictions on tax-exempt organizations, and rejected both free-speech and equal-protection arguments asserted against them. Regan v. Taxation With Representation of Washington, 461 U.S. 540 (1983). All of the Justices relied on the fact that the restrictions were content neutral and had been so administered. The three concurring justices, Blackmun, Brennan, and Marshall, explicitly relied on the ability of a § 501(c)(3) to create a controlled § 501(c)(4) affiliate to carry on lobbying activities in support of the § 501(c)(3) organization's charitable goals. See also Christian Echoes Nat'l Ministry, Inc. v. United States, 470 F.2d 849 (10th Cir. 1972), sustaining the restrictions against free-exercise-of-religion arguments.

IV. The § 501(h) Regulations:

A. This ¶ IV of the outline is extremely brief, precisely because the regulations are the subject of so much current attention. The first three articles cited in the bibliography, at p. 47, below, describe the currently-proposed regulations, provide background analysis of the developments leading to their issuance, and contrast them with the prior 1986 version of proposed regulations. The article cited at ¶ 1, p. 47, below, follows this outline in the materials; a more comprehensive work by the same author appears at ¶ 1, p. 55, below. The authors of the article cited at ¶ 3, p. 47, below, were also the principal draftsmen of the currently-proposed regulations.

B. As noted in ¶ III.H, p. 6, above, the Tax Reform Act of 1976 added §§ 501(h) and 4911 to the Code. No regulations were proposed, however, until ten years later. 51 Fed. Reg. 40211 (November 5, 1986). The 1986 proposals provoked agitated opposition from the nonprofit community. Hearings were held on the 1986 proposals on May 11 and 12, 1987. In addition, in response to the public outcry and a suggestion from Chairman Rostenkowski, IRS Commissioner Gibbs formed an Exempt Organizations Advisory Group, which met – and discussed the 1986 proposed regulations (among other items) – on September 17,

C. As of early 1989, very few – only about 1% of – eligible § 501(c)(3) organizations had elected § 501(h) treatment. The IRS is hopeful that the currently-proposed regulations are sufficiently clear and flexible to entice a much larger percentage of such organizations to choose the § 501(h) standards once the regulations become final. Some knowledgeable observers of the nonprofit world are skeptical, and expect the great bulk of such organizations to continue to choose to be governed by the "fuzzier" substantiality test of § 501(c)(3).

D. A hearing on the currently-proposed regulations was held on April 3, 1989, but – as of the date of this outline – the regulations were not expected to be promulgated in final form until the Fall of 1989 at the earliest.

V. 1987 Legislation – "OBRA".3

A. Introduction:

1. Congress became concerned about various problems of implementation and enforcement of the rules restricting lobbying and political activities of tax-exempt organizations. The problems included: (1) willful efforts by tax-exempt organizations to ignore or evade rules

3. Much of the material in this part V of the outline was prepared and published in a earlier form for ALI-ABA Section of Taxation Course of Study on Tax Exempt Charitable Organizations held in Washington, D.C., on November 17-18, 1988.
constraining political and lobbying activities; (2) lack of certainty in the non-profit community as to the scope of the statutory language proscribing such activities; and (3) the inability of the IRS (and the public) to monitor or enforce rules against such activities.

2. In response, the Subcommittee on Oversight of the House Ways and Means Committee held hearings in March of 1987. The Staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation prepared materials for the use of the members at those hearings. Staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation, Lobbying and Political Activities of Tax-Exempt Organizations (JCS-5-87, March 11, 1987). The hearings themselves are reported in Lobbying and Political Activities of Tax-Exempt Organizations: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Oversight of the House Comm. on Ways and Means, 100th Cong., 1st Sess. (1987). The Subcommittee subsequently issued its report, noted at ¶ I.A, p. 1, above. The Report's recommendations were generally adopted and expanded upon by the House Committee on the Budget, were also adopted with some modifications by the Conference Committee, and were incorporated into the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, Pub. L. No. 100-203, 101 Stat. 1330 (1987) [hereinafter referred to as "OBRA"], which was enacted into law on December 22, 1987. Because the Senate Finance Committee Report is silent with respect to all of the relevant provisions, and the Conference Committee Report deals only with new § 4955, virtually all of the legislative history resides in the House Budget Committee Report cited at ¶ V.B.2.b, p. 12, below.

3. The statutory changes will be analyzed under two main headings:

a. those imposing additional disclosure requirements on non-profits, primarily intended to make it easier to detect and monitor political and lobbying activities; and

b. those modifying and clarifying the rules affecting proscribed political and lobbying activities.

The first are considered in ¶ V.B, directly below; the second are considered in ¶ V.C, p. 29, below. Where relevant, mention is made of new or more vigorous penalties, and new or enhanced enforcement powers given to the IRS.

B. Disclosure Requirements:

1. Four new sets of rules were adopted by OBRA affecting information disclosure by certain charitable organizations: (1) rules requiring disclosure of the non-deductibility of certain amounts paid to such organizations (discussed at ¶ V.B.2, below); (2) rules mandating such organizations to make available certain information for public inspection (discussed at ¶ V.B.3, below); (3) rules increasing the information required to be disclosed on certain tax forms and applications filed by such organizations (discussed at ¶ V.B.4, below); and (4) rules compelling disclosure of the availability of free governmental information or services (discussed at ¶ V.B.5, below). Because only the first three are relevant here, the discussion of the fourth set of rules is extremely abbreviated.

2. Disclosure By Certain Tax-Exempt Organizations of Non-Deductibility of Contributions.

a. Prior Law. There was no requirement under prior Federal law that a tax-exempt organization state in its solicitations for donations whether such amounts were deductible as charitable contributions.

b. Abuses or Inadequacy of Prior Law. Some tax-exempt organizations, such as § 501(c)(4) lobbying organizations and § 527 political organizations, are allowed, within limitations, to engage in political and lobbying activity. Contributions to such organizations, however, are not tax-deductible. In some instances, these organizations were suggesting or implying in fundraising appeals that contributions were deductible.

The Report of the House Budget Committee on the Revenue Bill of 1987, which subsequently became part of OBRA, states:

"By virtue of this lack of disclosure or use of misleading statements, organizations that are allowed (within limitations) to engage in lobbying or political campaign activities are able to attract support from donors who then claim tax benefits that are available under law only for contributions to charitable organizations, which are precluded from engaging in any political campaign activities and are limited as to the extent of permissible lobbying activities."

H.R. Rep. No. 391, 100th Cong., 1st

The House OBRA Report noted that such conduct in effect "siphon[s] off tax benefits that are targeted to charitable organizations" and leads to donors unknowingly making improper claims for charitable deductions. House OBRA Report at 1607.

c. Disclosure Required Under OBRA.

(1) General Rule. New § 6113 requires that each "fundraising solicitation" by or on behalf of an organization which is subject to § 6113:

"shall contain an express statement (in a conspicuous and easily recognizable format) that contributions or gifts to such organization are not deductible as charitable contributions for Federal income tax purposes." § 6113(a).

The requirement is not satisfied by stating that the contributions are deductible only to the extent allowed by law, by stating that the contributor should consult with a tax advisor as to deductibility, or by making no statement at all. House OBRA Report at 1610. On the other hand, payments to noncharitable entities may sometimes be deductible as business expenses, rather than under § 170. No disclosure statement is necessary to deal with such cases. House OBRA Report at 1608 n. 3.

(2) Organizations Subject to the Requirements of § 6113. Subject to an exception for small organizations (discussed at ¶ V.B.2.c.(3)(b), below), two types of entities are subject to this new rule:

(a) Any organization described in §§ 501(c) (other than in § 501(c)(1)) or 501(d) and which is exempt from federal income tax, other than an organization described in § 170(c). § 6113(b)(1)(A). The disclosure requirement thus applies:

"to fundraising solicitations by or on behalf of social welfare organizations (sec. 501(c)(4)); labor unions (sec. 501(c)(5)); trade associations (sec. 501(c)(6)); social clubs (sec. 501(c)(7)); and [to a certain extent to] fraternal organizations (secs. 501(c)(8), (c)(10))." House
OBRA Report at 1608.

I.R.S. News Release IR-88-31 (Feb. 10, 1988) confirms that the § 6113 applies to "labor unions, trade associations, social clubs, political organizations, political action committees and other non-charitable organizations." It also says that:

"the statement that a contribution or gift is not deductible as a charitable contribution for federal income tax purposes must be included in a conspicuous and easily recognizable format on billings of membership renewals and membership solicitations."

A special rule for fraternal organizations is set forth in § 6113(b)(3).

(b) Any § 527 political organizations. § 6113(b)(1)(B).

There is a five-year "look-back" rule, making these rules applicable to organizations which were described in §§ 6113(b)(1)(A) or (B) at any time during the five-year period ending on the date of the fundraising solicitation, or which are "successors" to such organizations. § 6113(b)(1)(C).

(3) Organizations Not Subject to the Requirements of § 6113.

(a) The disclosure requirement does not apply to organizations, such as those described in § 501(c)(3), which are eligible to receive tax-deductible contributions. Congress was, however, concerned that some such entities were not adequately advising contributors about the proper amount to claim as a tax deduction, e.g., in connection with fundraising events like auctions, shows, banquets, and athletic events. House OBRA Report at 1607-08. In response to these concerns, the IRS has stepped up its audit activity of such instances, and has issued further guidance on how to determine the proper amount of a charitable deduction. See IR-88-120 (August 4, 1988) and Pub. 1391, Deductibility of Payments Made to Charities Conducting Fund-Raising Events (reprinting Rev. Rul. 67-246, 1967-2 C.B. 104). See also Special Report, IRS
Official Explains New Examination-Education Program on Charitable Contributions to Tax-Exempt Organizations, BNA DAILY TAX REP., Sept. 26, 1988, at J-1 - J-3 (interview with Assistant Commissioner Brauer; Q's & A's – drafted by ABA Tax Section's Exempt Organization Committee – attached for further "guidance"). Interestingly, the IRS recently ruled that neither an organization's failure to comply with Rev. Rul. 67-246, nor even its providing incorrect information about deductibility of payments, will result in any sanctions against the organization under the current state of the law. TAM 8832003 (May 6, 1988). In LTR 8909004 (Dec. 2, 1988), however, the Service urged that a field investigation be conducted of the organization involved in the earlier ruling. And, in comments at the Commissioner's Exempt Organizations Advisory Group meeting in January 1989, Assistant Commissioner Robert Brauer indicated that LTR 8832003 was under reconsideration.

(b) The disclosure requirement does not apply if the soliciting organization normally does not have gross receipts in excess of $100,000. § 6113(b)(2).

(4) Definition of Fundraising Solicitation. § 6113 applies to any solicitation of contributions made in writing, by television, by radio, or by telephone. § 6113(c)(1). It does not apply to face-to-face oral solicitations, but it would apply to any written materials distributed at the time of the oral solicitation. House OBRA Report at 1610. A de minimis exception is provided for fundraising solicitations which are "not part of a coordinated fundraising campaign soliciting more than 10 persons during the calendar year." § 6113(c)(2).

(5) Penalties. New § 6710 provides for a penalty of $1,000 for each day on which there was a failure to comply with § 6113, unless the failure was "due to reasonable cause." §§ 6710(a), (b). IR-88-13 (January 27, 1988), after describing the new requirements, gave an example which would fit within the "reasonable cause" exception. It:

"occurs when an organization had on hand at the time of the enactment of the law a printed supply of time-sensitive fund-raising solicitations without the disclosure statement, the costs to add a statement of nondeductibility would be a financial hardship, and the organization distributes them before April 1, 1988."

The maximum penalty for any year is $10,000, but a higher penalty, not subject to this maximum, applies if the failure to comply was "due to intentional disregard" of the rules. §§ 6710(a), (c).

a. Prior Law. Certain information about tax-exempt organizations was (and continues to be) available through requests to the IRS; other information was (and continues to be) available at the offices of tax-exempt organizations. Thus:

(1) The annual information return (Form 990) of a tax-exempt organization was (and continues to be) disclosable to the public through requests to the Service, except for the names of contributors. § 6104(b); Treas. Reg. § 6104(b)-1

(2) An exemption application filed by a tax-exempt organization, and the Service determination of its exempt status, were (and continue to be) disclosable to the public through requests to the Service. § 6104(a)(1)(A); Treas. Reg. §§ 301.6104-1, 301.6104(a)-1, 301.6104(a)-5(a), 301.6104(a)-6.

(3) Private foundations were (and still are) required to make their annual information returns (Form 990-PF) available for public inspection at their principal office. § 6104(d); Treas. Reg. § 301.6104(d)-1.

b. Abuses and Inadequacy of Prior Law. The House OBRA Report states that the prior procedure under which the public could obtain copies of annual information returns and exemption applications of tax-exempt organizations only through requests to the Service:

"[did] not result in full and timely public disclosure of the activities of charitable organizations, as needed to facilitate accountability of such organizations to the public from whom they solicit tax-deductible funds." House OBRA Report at 1612.

The Committee believed that the abuses outlined in ¶ V.B.2.b, above, could be curtailed by making information returns and exemption applications more readily available to the public. The major aim of the expanded availability of information returns and exemption applications is thus to help insure that the "double tax benefits of deductibility of contributions and exemption from income tax are limited to organizations whose assets are devoted exclusively to charitable purposes" and not to political campaign activity or prohibited lobbying. House OBRA Report at 1612.

c. Inspection Requirements Under OBRA. The main thrust of the new rules is to make more information available at the offices of the tax-exempt organization, rather than only via requests to the IRS.

(1) Annual Information Returns. New § 6104(e) requires that tax-exempt organizations (other than private foundations) must make available for inspection, during regular business hours, by any individual, at the organization's principal office, a copy of its three most recent annual information returns. If the organization regularly maintains regional or district offices having at least three employees, the returns must be made available at each such office as well. §§ 6104(e)(1)(A), (B). Names of contributors to the organization need not be disclosed. § 6104(e)(1)(C). Private foundations remain subject to the prior-law requirement that their current annual return be made available for public inspection at their principal office. § 6104(d).

(2) Exemption Applications. A tax-exempt organization must make available for inspection, during regular business hours, at the same offices described above, a copy of its application for recognition of exemption under § 501, along with any supporting papers, and any determination letter or other document issued by the Service with respect to such application. § 6104(e)(2)(A). This rule does not apply to organizations, such as churches, which are not required to file, and in fact have not filed, annual returns or exemption applications. However, if such an organization has nonetheless filed an exemption application, the exemption application disclosure rule applies.

(3) Penalties. § 6652(c) was amended by OBRA to provide that any person under a duty to comply with the inspection provisions who, without reasonable cause, fails to make annual information returns available for public inspection, is subject to a penalty of $10 for each day the disclosure requirement is not satisfied. A maximum penalty of $5,000 applies for all failures to disclose any one annual information return, but there is no limit on the penalty for failure to disclose an exemption application. §§ 6652(c)(1)(C), (D); 6652(e)(3). Additional penalties of $1,000 with respect to each return or exemption application may be assessed if the failure to permit public inspection was willful. § 6685.

(4) Effective Date. The new provisions generally apply to returns for years beginning after December 31, 1986. OBRA § 10702(b)(1). They apply to exemption applications after January 20, 1988, unless the exemption application was submitted to the IRS before July 16, 1987, and the organization does not have a copy of the application. OBRA § 10702(b)(2).

4. Additional Information on Annual Returns and Exemption Applications of § 501(c)(3) Organizations.

a. Prior Law.

(1) Annual Information Returns. Except for churches, religious organizations, and a very few other entities, any organization that is tax-exempt under § 501(a) must file an annual information return – Form 990 – with the Service, setting forth, among other things, the organization’s items of gross income, receipts, and disbursements. § 6033(a). A § 501(c)(3) organization must also provide additional information relating to contributions received by the organization and to compensation paid to its employees. § 6033(b). The Form does not request information about relationships with other exempt organizations, except as to "common membership, governing bodies, trustees, officers, etc." Form 990 (1987), Part VII, question 80.

An organization which, without reasonable cause, failed to file a required annual information return was subject to a penalty of $10 per day for each day the failure continued, with a maximum penalty of $5,000 with regard to any one return. In addition, the organization's managers were subject to a similar penalty if, without reasonable cause, they refused to file the return after demand from the IRS. §§ 6652(c)(1), (2).

(2) Exemption Applications. The exemption application for § 501(c)(3) organizations asks whether the applicant controls, is controlled by, or is financially accountable to, another organization; whether the applicant is "the outgrowth of another organization"; and whether the applicant has "a special relationship" (such as interlocking directorships) with another organization. Form 1023 (Rev. April 1984), Part III, questions 5 and 6. The application form and instructions do not require more detailed information about affiliated or predecessor organizations.
b. Abuses and Inadequacy of Prior Law. The House Budget Committee believed that the disclosures required on exemption applications and annual returns were not sufficient to allow the Service to determine whether tax-deductible contributions were being diverted to noncharitable uses. The Committee noted, "[i]n particular," that the returns did not require sufficient information as to whether the charitable organization was affiliated with other types of exempt organizations which are permitted to carry on substantial lobbying or political activities. Thus:

"[f]or example, full disclosure is not specifically required with respect to the sharing of salaried employees, office space, mailing lists, or other expenses, or the sale, lease, loan, contribution or grant, or other transfer of funds and assets between such organizations, even though these types of relationships or transactions may give rise to abuses of tax-exempt status as a charitable organization and diversion of tax-deductible contributions to political campaign expenditures or other impermissible uses." House OBRA Report at 1616.

Under prior law, there was also no penalty for failing to include required information on Forms 990 or 990-PF. The House Committee observed that the "mere filing of a return without fully and accurately furnishing the required information does not serve the enforcement and accountability objectives of the return requirement." House OBRA Report at 1616. A subsequent report, prepared by the General Accounting Office at the request of House Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer, and Monetary Affairs, found that almost one-half of all Form 990's filed were incomplete, and lacked one or more supporting schedules. General Accounting Office, Availability and Completeness of Returns for Tax-Exempt Organizations (GAO/GGD-88-128 September 1988).

c. Disclosure Required Under OBRA.

(1) Annual Information Returns. § 6033(b) was amended to provide that the annual return filed by a § 501(c)(3) organization must include such information as may be required by the IRS with respect to "direct or indirect transfers to, and other direct or indirect transactions and relationships with" any other organization described in § 501(c) (other than another § 501(c)(3) organization) and with any political organization described in § 527. § 6033(b)(9). The regulations are to prescribe the required information to prevent "diversion of funds from the organization's exempt purpose" and the "misallocation of revenues or expenses" between organizations. § 6033(b)(9)(A) and (B). Broad authority is granted to adopt other so-called legislative regulations. §
Penalties. OBRA amended § 6033(b)(10).

(2) Penalties. OBRA amended § 6652(c) to impose penalties on a tax-exempt organization which, without reasonable cause, fails to include any information required on a filed return, or furnishes incorrect information. The penalty is $10 for each day during which the failure continues, but not more than the lesser of (1) $5,000 or (2) 5 percent of the organization's gross receipts for the year. § 6652(c)(1)(A). If the organization's managers refuse to furnish the required information after written demand by the IRS, they are subject to a similar penalty (not to exceed $5,000 on all persons with respect to one return), unless the failure is due to reasonable cause. § 6652(c)(2)(B). Thus, to avoid the possibility of penalties, if a question on the annual information return is inapplicable to an organization, the organization might well so indicate on the return, rather than leaving a question unanswered or a line on the return blank.

(3) Effective Date. The additional information must be furnished on annual returns for years beginning after December 31, 1987. The penalty for failure to provide required or correct information applies to returns for years beginning after December 31, 1986. OBRA §§ 10703(b), 10704(d)(1).

(4) Exemption Applications. OBRA did not amend the statute with respect to information required to be included in exemption applications. The legislative history, however, requests the Service to revise Form 1023 or its instructions to provide more detailed information:

"relating to whether the applicant is controlled by or is the outgrowth of another organization, or has a special relationship with another organization, . . . [or] was controlled by or had interlocking boards of directors with any other exempt organization within the last five years, and whether the applicant has taken over or plans to take over any assets (such as mailing lists or intangible assets) of any other exempt organization."
House OBRA Report at 1618.

As of the end of May 1, 1989, however, no revisions to Form 1023 or its instructions had been issued, and the current version of the Form will be in effect until September 30, 1989, at the earliest. Ann. 89-59, 1989-18 I.R.B. 22, however, states that "a revised version of [the] form will be issued before that date."

5. Disclosure That Certain Information or Services Sold By Tax-Exempt Organizations Are Available Free from the Federal Government.

a. Prior Law. There was no tax penalty if a tax-exempt organization selling information or services to the public failed to disclose that such information or services could be obtained free (or for nominal charge) directly from the Federal Government.

b. Disclosure Required Under OBRA.

(1) General Rule. New § 6711 imposes a penalty on any tax-exempt organization that intentionally offers to sell:

"specific information or a routine service for any individual which could be readily obtained by such individual free of charge (or for a nominal charge) from an agency of the Federal Government" without making "an express statement (in a conspicuous and easily recognizable format) that the information or service can be so obtained." The penalty is only imposed if the failure to disclose is due to "intentional disregard" of the disclosure requirement. § 6711(a).

(2) Penalty. The intentional failure to disclose subjects the organization to a penalty equal to the greater of (1) $1,000 for each day the failure occurred, or (2) 50 percent of the aggregate cost of solicitations made. § 6711(b).

(3) Effective Date. The new provisions apply to offers after January 31, 1988. OBRA § 10705(c).

C. Modification and Clarification of Rules:

1. Five new sets of rules were adopted by OBRA modifying or clarifying the prior law on prescribed political and lobbying activities: (1) a modification to the scope of political campaign activities (discussed at ¶ V.C.2, below), (2) tax status of organizations after losing § 501(c)(3) status because of prohibited activity (discussed at ¶ V.C.3, below), (3) excise tax on certain political expenditures (discussed at ¶ V.C.4, below), (4) additional enforcement authority to deal with flagrant abuses (discussed at ¶ V.C.5, below), and (5) excise tax on certain lobbying expenditures (discussed at ¶ V.C.6, below).

2. Clarification of Prohibited Political Campaign Activities.

a. Prior Law. An organization did not qualify for tax-exempt status as a charitable organization, and was not eligible to receive tax-deductible contributions, unless the organization did "not participate in, or intervene in (including the publishing or distributing of statements), any political campaign on behalf of any candidate for public office." E.g., §§ 501(c)(3), 170(c)(2)(D). The quoted language was added as part of the 1954 Internal Revenue Code. Treasury regulations interpreted it as covering such activities either on behalf of or in opposition to any candidate for public office. Treas. Reg. § 1.501(c)(3)-1(c)(3)(iii). See generally Cummings, Political Expenditures, Tax Mgmt. (BNA) 231-3rd (1988), at A-30 et seq.

b. Inadequacy of Prior Law. The House Committee felt that the statutory language:

"should be clarified to make specific reference to such activities in opposition to, as well as such activities on behalf of, a candidate for public office. This clarification reflects the present-law interpretation of the statute." House OBRA Report at 1621.

c. Definition of Prohibited Political Activity Under OBRA. The relevant Code provisions were amended to add the parenthetical phrase "(or in opposition to)" to the pre-existing statutory language. §§ 170(c)(2)(D); 501(c)(3); 504(a)(2)(B); 2055(a)(2) and (3); 2106(a)(2)(A)(ii) and (iii); 2522(a)(2); 2522(b)(2) and (3).

a. Prior Law. Prior law provided (and still provides) that a charitable organization might lose its tax-exempt status under § 501(c)(3) because of its lobbying or political-campaign activities. See Cum- mings, Political Expenditures, Tax MGMT. (BNA) 231-3rd (1988), at A-47 et seq. A distinction existed, however, under the pre-OBRA version of § 504(a), as to qualification as a § 510(c)(4) (social welfare) organization following such loss of § 501(c)(3) status:

(1) If § 501(c)(3) status was lost by virtue of lobbying activities, the organization could not be treated thereafter as a tax-exempt social welfare organization.

(2) If, however, § 501(c)(3) status was lost through prohibited political campaign activities, the organization was sometimes eligible to be automatically reclassified as tax-exempt under § 501(c)(4).

b. Abuses or Inadequacy of Prior Law. There was no logical rationale for the above distinction.

"If . . . an organization could simply convert from one category of tax-exempt status to another, the revocation of its exempt status under section 501(c)(3) would not constitute a sufficient penalty (particularly if the organization did not plan to seek tax-deductible contributions thereafter) for violating the flat prohibition on political campaign activities, or operate as a sufficient deterrent to dissuade charitable organizations from engaging in such prohibited activities." House OBRA Report at 1622.

c. Change in Law Under OBRA. § 504(a)(2) was amended to deny § 501(c)(4) status to any §501(c)(3) organization losing its exemption by virtue of political-campaign activities. The House OBRA Report adds that:

"the Treasury Department may issue regulations as necessary or appropriate to prevent the avoidance of the rule, e.g., as where the disqualified organization directly or indirectly transfers all or part of its assets to an organization controlled (directly or indirectly) by the same persons who controlled the transferor." House OBRA Report at 1622.

a. Prior Law. As mentioned in ¶ V.C.3.a, above, under prior (and present) law, any § 501(c)(3) organization, whether or not a private foundation, ceases to qualify for tax-exemption and for eligibility to receive tax-deductible contributions if it engages in political-campaign activities. Under prior (and present) law a private foundation (but not a public charity) is also subject to various excise-tax "penalties" under § 4945 for engaging in certain types of lobbying or political activities. See also § 6684.

b. Abuses or Inadequacy of Prior Law. For § 501(c)(3) organizations other than private foundations, the pre-OBRA sanctions for engaging in political activities — loss of tax-exempt status and eligibility for tax-deductible contributions, but no excise taxes — were sometimes either too harsh or too weak:

(1) The IRS might "hesitate to revoke the exempt status of a charitable organization . . . in circumstances where that penalty may seem disproportionate," such as "where the expenditure was unintentional and involved only a small amount" and the organization subsequently corrected its procedures. House OBRA Report at 1623-24.

(2) Conversely, "revocation of exempt status may be ineffective as a penalty or as a deterrent, particularly if the organization ceases operations after it has diverted all its assets to improper purposes." House OBRA Report at 1624.

The latter may have been more significant than the former. In the months preceding the enactment of OBRA, there was considerable concern among members of Congress that organizations claiming tax-exempt status had been engaging in prohibited political activities. The most celebrated instance of this abuse was the National Endowment for the Preservation of Liberty (NEPL). NEPL was an exempt organization which supported the Administration's policy toward Nicaragua. NEPL allegedly received funds from the sale of arms to Iran and used them to finance the campaigns of conservative members of Congress and to fund advertisements against members of Congress who opposed aid to the Contras. Among the members opposed by NEPL was Congressman J.J. Pickle, the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight which held the hearings (see ¶ V.A.2, above) which ultimately led to the relevant OBRA legislation. The Service revoked NEPL's exempt status after its president, Carl Channell, pleaded guilty to conspiracy to defraud the government by using tax-deductible contributions to fund the Contras. See The Political Activities of Exempt Groups — What the Experts Say, 34 Tax Notes 1147-49 (March 23, 1987).

c. Excise Taxes On Political Expenditures Under OBRA.

(1) General Rule. New § 4955, entitled "Taxes on Political Expenditures of Section 501(c)(3) Organizations," provides that a charitable organization that makes a "political expenditure" is subject to essentially the same first-tier and second-tier excise taxes to which private foundations have been (and continue to be) subject under § 4945. § 4955(a), (b). The adoption of the excise tax sanction "does not modify the present-law rule that an organization does not qualify for tax-exempt status as a charitable organization, and is not eligible to receive tax-deductible contributions," if it engages in political-campaign activities. House OBRA Report at 1624. The § 4955 excise tax may be avoided if the "taxable event" was "not willful and flagrant" and has been "corrected." § 4962(a), (c). § 4962(c) was added in Conference. See H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 100-495, 100th Cong., 1st sess. 1020, reprinted in 1987 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 2313-1760, 2313-1767 [hereinafter referred to as the "Conference OBRA Report"].

(2) Definition of Political Expenditures Subject to the Excise Tax. The House bill imposed the excise tax on two categories of expenditures, the first of which (called the "general" rule) applies to all charitable entities, but the second of which (styled "other expenditures") would have applied only in more limited situations:

(a) All § 501(c)(3) entities are subject to the excise tax with respect to

"any amount paid or incurred . . . in any participation in, or intervention in (including the publication or distribution of statements), any political campaign on behalf of (or in opposition to) any candidate for public office."

The quoted language was accepted in Conference and was enacted as § 4955(d)(1).

(b) A more limited group of charitable organizations – those "formed, or availed of, substantially for purposes of promoting the candidacy or potential candidacy of an individual for public office" – would also have been subject to the excise tax with respect to five additional types of expenditures enumerated in the bill. House OBRA Report at 1627. As modified by the Conference Agreement, this provision is § 4955(d)(2).

The Conference Agreement modified the House Bill by narrowing the definition of the organizations subject to excise tax on the second (and expanded) types of expenditures. They include only entities either formed or "effectively controlled by" a candidate, and only if such entities are "primarily" formed or availed of to promote such candidacy.

(3) Statutory Interpretation. The legislative history gives some guidance as to the interpretation of "effectively controlled by," "primary" purpose, and the scope of the enumerated additional categories of expenses. Thus:

(a) The Conference Report states that:

"an organization is to be considered as effectively controlled by a candidate or prospective candidate only if the individual has a continuing, substantial involvement in the day-to-day operations or management of the organization. An organization is not to be considered as effectively controlled by a candidate or a prospective candidate merely because it is affiliated with such candidate, or merely because the candidate knows the directors, officers, or employees of the organization. Likewise, the effectively controlled test is not met merely because the organization carries on its research, study, or educational activities with respect to issues in which the individual is interested or with which the individual is associated. Conference OBRA Report at 1021.

(b) The House OBRA Report states that:

"the determination of whether the primary purposes of an organization . . . are promoting the candidacy or prospective candidacy of an individual for public office is to be made on the basis of all relevant facts and circumstances." House OBRA Report at 1021.

Various relevant factors are set forth in the Conference OBRA Report at 1021-22.
The five categories of additional expenses which are subject to the excise tax, under § 4955(d)(2), are:

"(A) Amounts paid or incurred to such individual for speeches or other services;

"(B) Travel expenses of such individual;

"(C) Expenses of conducting polls, surveys, or other studies, or preparing papers or other materials, for use by such individual;

"(D) Expenses of advertising, publicity, and fund-raising for such individual.

"(E) Any other expense which has the primary effect of promoting public recognition, or otherwise primarily accruing to the benefit of such individual."

Some additional guidance on the intended scope of these categories is provided by the House OBRA Report at 1627 and the Conference OBRA Report at 1021.

(4) Enforcement. The House Committee directed the Service to report periodically to the committee concerning its enforcement of the prohibition against political campaign activities. House OBRA Report at 1627-28. See also ¶ V.C.5.c, below.

5. Additional Enforcement Authority in the Case of Flagrant Political Expenditures by Charitable Organizations.

a. Prior Law. The Service did not have authority to make immediate "termination" tax assessments or to seek a court injunction against continuing political expenditures of a charitable organization even if the organization was flagrantly violating the prohibition on any political campaign activities. The Service does, however, have such authority in other areas of the tax law.

b. Abuses and Inadequacy of Prior Law. The House Committee found that certain organizations which engaged in prohibited political activities (and thus ceased to qualify for tax-exempt status and eligibility to receive tax-deductible contributions) nonetheless continued to represent themselves as eligible to receive tax-deductible contributions and then used these funds for prohibited activities. Under prior law, the Service might not be able to revoke an organization's exemption status until the organization filed its information return and the return was selected for audit. House OBRA Report at 1628-29.

As the legislative history stated:

"By that time, all contributions received by the organization (for which the donors have claimed charitable deductions) and its other assets may have been spent on non-exempt activities, and the organization may have ceased operations. As a result, the subsequent issuance of the exemption revocation does not have a deterrent effect on the organization or operate as an effective penalty, particularly since the organization no longer may have any assets out of which tax liabilities could be collected."

House OBRA Report at 1629.

c. Enforcement Authority Under OBRA.

(1) Determination and Assessment of Income Tax. New § 6852 authorizes the IRS to make an immediate determination and assessment of income tax, or of the excise tax on political expenditures, for the current or preceding taxable year, of a § 501(c)(3) organization if the Service finds that (i) the organization has made political expenditures, and (ii) such expenditures constitute a flagrant violation of the prohibition against political expenditures.

(2) Authority to Enjoin Flagrant Political Expenditures of § 501(c)(3) Organizations. New § 7409 authorizes the Service to seek an injunction from a federal district court prohibiting a charitable organization from making any further political expenditures. The injunction action may be instituted only if the Service notifies the organization of its intention to seek an injunction if the making of the political expenditures does not immediately cease, and only if the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has personally determined that (1) the organization has flagrantly participated or intervened in a political campaign, and (2) injunctive relief is appropriate to prevent future political expenditures.

a. Prior Law. A charitable organization (including a private foundation) ceases to qualify for tax-exempt status under § 501(c)(3), or for eligibility to receive tax-deductible contributions, if more than an insubstantial part of its activities consists of carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation, except as provided in § 501(h). A private foundation is subject to an excise tax equal to ten percent of any expenditure to carry on propaganda or otherwise to attempt to influence legislation or for any other non-charitable purposes. § 4945. If the foundation is liable for the excise tax, any manager of the foundation who, without reasonable cause, agreed to making the expenditure knowing it was a taxable expenditure is subject to an excise tax equal to 2-1/2 percent of the expenditure (not to exceed $5,000 per expenditure).

Certain tax-exempt charities may elect to have the amount of permitted lobbying expenditures they may make measured under the arithmetical tests of § 501(h). If lobbying expenditures exceed the amounts allowed under § 501(h), a tax equal to twenty-five percent of the excess lobbying expenditures is imposed on the organization. If the electing organization's lobbying expenditures are normally more than 150 percent of the allowed amounts, the organization is disqualified from tax-exempt status.

b. Abuses or Inadequacy of Prior Law. The House OBRA Report noted that:
"revocation of exempt status may be ineffective in the case of certain charitable organizations as a penalty or as a deterrent to engaging in more than insubstantial lobbying activities, particularly if the organization ceases operations after it has diverted all its tax-deductible contributions and exempt income to improper purposes but before it has been audited and any income tax liability has been assessed." House OBRA Report at 1631.

It was believed that a more effective sanction against prohibited lobbying activities would be to supplement the sanction of revocation of exempt status with an excise tax similar to the excise taxes applicable to private foundations and § 501(h)-electing organizations.

c. Excise Taxes Disqualifying Political Expenditures Under OBRA.

(1) General Rule. New § 4912, added by OBRA, imposes a 5-percent excise tax on the lobbying expenditures of certain charitable organizations if the organization ceases to qualify for tax-exempt status under § 501(c)(3) by engaging in more than an insubstantial amount of lobbying activities. § 4912(a). The excise tax does not apply to (i) organizations that have made the 501(h) election; (ii) organizations not eligible to make the 501(h) election; and (iii) private foundations (which are subject to the § 4945 excise tax). § 4912(c)(2).

(2) Managers' Liability. The Conference Agreement modified the House Bill to provide that if an organization whose exempt status has been revoked is liable for the new excise tax on disqualifying lobbying expenditures, a tax equal to five percent of such lobbying expenditure is imposed on any manager of the organization who agreed to the making of such expenditures "knowing that such expenditures are likely to result" in revocation of the organization's exempt status, unless the manager's agreement was not willful and was due to reasonable cause. § 4912(b). The House Bill would have imposed the tax on a manager who agreed to the making of such expenditures knowing that such expenditures "could" result in revocation of the organization's tax-exempt status. A manager is liable for the excise tax only if the Service demonstrates that the manager knew the expenditures constituted lobbying expenditures, knew that the organization was likely to lose its tax exempt status as a result of the expenditures, and only if the manager failed to obtain an opinion of counsel that would protect the manager under the reasonable cause exception.
VI. Concluding Observations:

A. Although tax-exempt organizations' lobbying and political activities have been scrutinized by Congress, courts, and the Service for over 70 years, the current status of the rules is neither satisfactory nor stable. Regulation of such activities strikes close to the core of constitutionally-protected rights, but existing cases do not set forth doctrines or lines adequate to guide future legislative or regulatory initiatives. Yet the issues remain volatile, by virtue of both increased advocacy by tax-exempt entities and increased concern by members of Congress. Thus, further developments seem certain, but their thrust seems impossible to predict.

B. As a corollary, there is good reason here for encouraging further analysis of and writing about the issues. The nonprofit community needs better guidelines for the permitted scope of its lobbying activities, and legislators, legislative staffers, and regulators need firmer ground on which to stand when proposing new or amending old legislation, regulations, or the like.
BIBLIOGRAPHY

on

LOBBYING

and

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

of

TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS

ARTICLES:

5. Christopher, Political Activities Become More Risky for Tax Exempts Due to RA '87, 68 J. Tax'n 136-9 (March 1988).

18. Sheppard, Sweet Charity and the Lobbying Taint, 34 Tax Notes 848-50 (March 2, 1987).

38. Field, Charitable Lobbying Restraints Held to be Discrimina-
May 14, 1989 Lobbying and Political Activities of Tax-Exempt Organizations

BOOKS AND PORTFOLIOS:

SELECTED RECENT CONGRESSIONAL MATERIALS:

1. Staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation, Lobbying and Political Activities of Tax-Exempt Organizations (JCS-5-87, March 11, 1987).

Revised Proposed Regulations
On Lobbying by Electing
Public Charities and
By Private Foundations

By JASPER L. CUMMINGS, JR.

Reprinted from the March 1989 issue of TAXES—The Tax Magazine
Published and Copyrighted 1989 by Commerce Clearing House, Inc., Chicago, Illinois 60646
All Rights Reserved
Revised Proposed Regulations
On Lobbying by Electing
Public Charities and
By Private Foundations

By JASPER L. CUMMINGS, JR.

According to the author, recently proposed regulations on grassroots lobbying by electing public charities and by private foundations, the third effort by the Treasury in nine years to define lobbying, provide a reasonable measure of certainty lacking in the previous two sets of proposals and should pass into final form relatively unchanged.

On December 22, 1988 the Treasury filed revised proposed regulations under Sections 4911, 4945 and related sections, which were published in the December 23, 1988 Federal Register. This proposal deals with the scope of influencing legislation (herein “lobbying”) permitted to “private foundations” that are subject to Chapter 42A and to “public charities” (which herein refers to Section 501(c)(3) organizations that are not private foundations) that make the election under Section 501(h). The proposal revises or supersedes regulations proposed in 1986 and should go far toward satisfying the vociferous complaints that followed the 1986 proposal. In this article, after a brief review of the history of the interrelationship of lobbying and taxation, the changes in the newly proposed regulations will be discussed.

Brief History of Lobbying and the Internal Revenue Code

Lobbying by Charities and Business Taxpayers. Lobbying by what are now Section 501 (c)(3) organizations (sometimes referred to as charities) first was identified as being inconsistent with tax-exempt status as early as 1919.

1 At §1826-45 (herein, the “1988 Prop. Reg.”).
2 See generally Cummings, 231-3d T. M., Political Expenditures.
Treasury Decision 2831, issued that year, stated that "associations formed to disseminate controversial or partisan propaganda are not educational within the meaning of the statute." See v. Commissioner, a "vocabulary case" in the area written by Judge Learned Hand in 1930, seemed to expand this prohibition from educational to charitable organizations generally. In 1934 Congress amended the predecessor of Section 501(e)(3) to deny its benefits to an organization having as a "substantial part" of its activities "carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation." This language remains unchanged in Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

Regulations define charities that impermissibly lobby as "action organizations," but provide no guidance on measuring a "substantial part." They define influencing legislation as both contacting and urging the public to contact legislators about legislation as well as advocating the adoption or rejection of legislation generally. Before reaching those issues, however, the regulations require that charities potentially concerned with legislation be pigeonholed in one of two ways. If the charity has a main objective that can be attained only by legislation or its defeat, then it is an "action" organization if "it advocates, or campaigns for" its objective, as opposed to making available to the public "nonpartisan analysis, study or research." Other charities must satisfy the substantial part test that permits advocacy with respect to legislation only as an insubstantial part of the charity's activities. If the charity fails that test it also is an "action" organization and therefore is deemed not to be operated exclusively for an exempt purpose.

After 1934 the next congressional foray into the lobbying area was the enactment of Section 162(e) in 1962. It permits a business deduction for direct lobbying on matters of direct interest to a business taxpayer. Section 162(e)(2)(B) provides, however, that the deduction does not extend to any attempt to influence the general public with respect to legislative matters. Such attempts officially acquired the name "grassroots campaigns" in Reg. § 1.162-20(c)(4), as amended in 1969. That regulation defined such a campaign as an attempt "to urge or encourage the public to contact members of a legislative body for the purposes of proposing, supporting, or opposing legislation." Regulation § 1.162-20 (a)(2) provides, however, that ads presenting views on economic, financial, social or other subjects of a general nature may escape the grassroots lobbying classification.

Private Foundations. The year 1969 also brought the new limitations on activities of charities that are classified as "private foundations." Section 4945(d)(1) included attempts to influence legislation within the "taxable expenditures" of a private foundation that are subject to an excise tax. As in Section 162(e), specific reference was made to influencing the general public and the legislative history indicates a similarity of treatment of grassroots lobbying in the two sections. Section 4945(e)(2) specifically excluded from its lobbying definition: (1) providing technical advice on request, (2) nonpartisan analysis and (3) self-protection lobbying. The legislative history suggests that expenditures that are not subject to tax under Section 4945 are those that are not considered to be lobbying under Section 501(c)(3). By 1972, Treasury issued regulations on the lobbying provisions of Section 4945. Regulation § 53.4945(a)(1) generally limits the definition of lobbying to influencing legislation being considered by, or to be submitted imminently to, a legislative body. Regulation § 53.4945-2(d)(4) added discussion of broad social, economic and similar problems to the statutory list of non-lobbying activities, even if the issues ultimately may result in legislation, so long as the discussion is not directly addressed to the merits of a "specific legislative proposal." Examples (1) and (2) of Reg. § 53.4945-2(d)(1)(v) illustrated the concept of nonpartisan analysis as including a call for legislation when coupled with a sufficiently full and fair exposition of the pertinent facts to enable the public to form an independent opinion or conclusion on the pros and cons of the issue; it excluded the favoring of proposed legislation when the pros and cons are not explained. Even an even-handed publication, however, could not be directed toward persons interested

---

2 IRC §§ 552, 42 F. 2d 184 (CA-2 1930).
3 See also IRC Secs. 170(e)(2)(D); 2055(a)(2) and (3); 2105(a)(2)(A)(ii) and (iii); 222(a)(2), (b)(2) and (3).

---

194 TAXES—The Tax Magazine March, 1989
in only one side of an issue.\textsuperscript{12} This was a limited application of a broader observation that had appeared in Rev. Rul. 62-156\textsuperscript{13} that selective dissemination to an audience that can be reasonably expected to respond in a certain way cannot be impartial.

Safe Harbor Lobbying Election for Public Charities. In 1976 Congress was dissatisfied with the state of the lobbying restrictions as applied to public charities. Neither cases nor regulations had provided sufficient guidance as to what constituted lobbying “activities” and how to measure the “substantial” part.\textsuperscript{14} Therefore, public charities were given an option under new Section 501(h) to elect to replace the “substantial part” test with relatively specific expenditure limits plus a program of penalties in Section 4911 for violations that were not so egregious as to cause loss of Section 501(c)(3) status. Section 4911 is quite similar to Section 4945 in its definition of lobbying. Section 501(h)(7)(B) specifically directs, however, that the lobbying definition of Section 4911 should not be applied to nonelecting organizations.

The 1970s brought other significant authority. In 1972 in one of the few appellate decisions in the area, the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals indicated that an attempt to influence legislation could occur in the Section 501(c)(3) context without specific legislation being mentioned or pending.\textsuperscript{18} In 1978 the IRS published its most extensive pronouncements on lobbying in the business context in Revenue Rulings 78-111, -112, -113 and -114.\textsuperscript{14} Most significantly, the first of these dealt with a corporation mailing to shareholders its president’s testimony in opposition to an antipollution bill. Although Reg. § 1.162-20(c)(4) spoke of a grassroots campaign as one urging or encouraging the public to contact legislators, the court stated that the corporation’s mailing was grassroots lobbying even though the public (in the form of the shareholders) was not requested to contact any legislators. Similarly, in Rev. Rul. 78-112 the IRS found ads to be lobbying even though they did not call for action but only attempted to develop a “grassroots point of view.”

The 1980 Proposed Regulations. In 1980 the Treasury proposed essentially identical regulations under Sections 162(e) and 4945, defining expenditures “in connection with” attempts to influence the general public with respect to legislative matters, including a grassroots campaign, by a three-factor test.\textsuperscript{17} The introduction to the notice of proposed rulemaking justified this conformity by referring to the legislative history of the 1969 private foundation legislation which stated that the grassroots lobbying rules under Sections 162(e)(2) and 4945 were intended to be “substantially similar.” The proposed test considered a communication to be grassroots lobbying if it (1) “pertains to” legislation, (2) reflects a view on it (which could be done by selective dissemination) and (3) is distributed so as to reach members of the general public as voters or constituents. It defined a lobbying expenditure as one “in connection with” lobbying.

The 1980 proposal appeared to differ from existing regulations or understanding of the law in several respects. First, the proposal seemed to push comment on needed legislation that was not pending toward lobbying as opposed to non-lobbying comment on broad issues, under the rubric that the proposal “could not be implemented without legislation.”\textsuperscript{19} Second, some have read the proposal to eliminate a requirement of encouragement to act.\textsuperscript{19} Third, the proposal treated the entire cost of an ad as a lobbying expense if any part of the ad attempts to influence the general public on legislation.\textsuperscript{20}

The 1986 Proposed Regulations

On November 5, 1986, Treasury published additional proposed regulations under Section 4945 relating to grants by private foundations to public charities and the initial proposed regulations under Sections 501(h) and 4911, 10 years after the enactment of those sections.\textsuperscript{21} The Section 4911 proposals closely followed the 1980 proposed regulations under Sections 162(e) and \textsuperscript{12} Reg. § 53.4945-2(d)(1)(iv).

\textsuperscript{13} 1962-2 CB 47.
\textsuperscript{14} H. R. Rept. No. 1210, 94th Cong., 1st Sess. 7-8 (1975), 1976-3 CB (Vol. 3) 37-38.
\textsuperscript{16} 1978-1 CB 41-44.
\textsuperscript{17} 45 Fed. Reg. 78167 (proposed November 25, 1980) (herein, the “1980 Prop. Reg.”).
\textsuperscript{20} 1980 Prop. Reg. § 53.4945-2(b)(1). This was somewhat inconsistent with authority for apportionment to lobbying of part of the cost of a membership communication that included encouragement of direct lobbying, S. Rept. No. 938 (Part 2), 94th Cong., 2d Sess. 81 n.4 (1976), 1976-3 CB 723.
\textsuperscript{21} 51 Fed. Reg. 40211 (proposed Nov. 5, 1986).
This evidenced an intention to continue to link treatment of business and charitable lobbying, as had been mentioned in the legislative history of the 1969 private foundation legislation and the 1980 proposal. The 1986 proposal met substantial opposition. In March of 1988, Treasury announced that it would withdraw the 1986 proposal and repurpose those regulations.

The objections were somewhat surprising in light of the similarity of the 1986 proposal to the 1980 proposal under Section 4945. Apparently, the public charity community had not perceived the treatment of private foundations proposed in 1980 as indicating the Treasury's views on charities generally. The 1986 version of the three-factor test for grassroots lobbying did change in that the requirement that the legislation be "likely in the immediate future to be proposed to" the legislature was dropped. This did not necessarily increase its scope, however, because both versions also covered the vague range of communication that "seeks or opposes legislation." As in 1980, a communication was deemed to reflect a view if it was selectively disseminated, and the "all or nothing" test still was applied to the cost of ads and was expanded to mixed-purpose fundraising literature. The eight examples relating to grassroots lobbying under the 1986 proposal were virtually identical to the eight examples in the 1980 proposals.

The principal objections to the 1986 proposals included: (1) lobbying should not occur until actual legislation is pending or about to be introduced, (2) lobbying should only occur when there is a clear call to action, (3) the "all or nothing" rule for mixed-purpose communications is unfair, and (4) the "in connection with" test is too vague.

The 1988 Revised Proposed Regulations

Favorable to Private Foundations and Electing Public Charities. At almost every point, the 1988 revisions appear to favor greater lobbying flexibility and certainty for electing public charities and private foundations. The "Supplementary Information" (or preface) appearing in the notice of proposed rulemaking emphasizes this view in several ways. First, it recognizes the legitimate desire of charities to come as close to the lobbying line as possible. Second, it admits that the new definition of grassroots lobbying is less-inclusive than "permitted" by the statutes.

Third, it observes that the proposed definition of grassroots lobbying is so narrow that any further contraction would effectively eliminate the statutory limitation on such lobbying by electing charities. Fourth, it observes that the definition is so narrow that reliance on the exclusions from the definition of lobbying provided for nonpartisan analysis and broad social comment seldom will be necessary.

While increased certainty should be welcomed by private foundations that cannot escape the reach of Section 4945, the 1988 proposal also seems purposefully designed to attract public charities to the Section 501(h) election. The preface points out that the proposed rules are not applicable to lobbying by ineligible or nonelecting public charities, which continue to be covered by the "substantial part" test. It also emphasizes that electing public charities need not concern themselves with the vague concept of "activities" (on which the substantial part test is based), as opposed to quantifiable expenditures of the organization, on which tests under the safe harbor election are based.

Increased use of the elections not only should make charities feel safer about what they already were doing but should encourage lobbying by some charities that before have completely avoided the area. The benefits are not all to the charities, however. The IRS should have fewer difficult decisions to make on audit. Furthermore, the many bright lines drawn in the proposal should have the result of "making" electing charities behave within the boundaries the Treasury deems acceptable under the Code, in its interpretive wisdom.

New Linking and Delinking. The preface strains to link Sections 4911 and 4945 and thereby 22 See 34 Tax Notes 848 (March 2, 1987); 34 Tax Notes 1147 (March 23, 1987); 38 Tax Notes 212 (January 18, 1988).

---

23 See 38 Tax Notes 1201 (March 7, 1988).
24 Note that the central definition in Section 4911 is of "lobbying expenditures" which are expenditures "for the purpose of influencing legislation." The proposed regulation interpreted this as covering an expenditure "in connection with" lobbying, which is defined as an activity that "pertains to" legislation. The same "in connection with" phrase appears in Section 162(e)(2)(B). It does not, however, appear in Section 4945 or 4911. It and "pertains to" did appear, however, in 1980 Prop. Reg. §§ 53.4945-2(b)(1) and 1.162-20(c)(4).
25 One wonders how comfortable the drafters were with the scope of what is "required" by the statutes.
26 An official of the IRS has confirmed an expectation that the new rules should encourage greater use of the election. Sec. 42 Tax Notes 150 (January 9, 1989).
27 See also 1988 Prop. Reg. § 1.501(h)-3(e), Example (5).
justifying the identity of the proposed regulations under the two sections. It states that the statutory schemes under the two sections are similar, which is true. It also states, however, that all Section 501(c)(3) organizations share "unique charitable and educational purposes." This, of course, would justify extending the rules to non-electing public charities under the substantial part test, but the preface specifically states there is no such extension. It seems more likely that the reason for linking these two is partly the coincidence of the two separate needs cited above: private foundations that are involuntarily caught in the excise tax scheme are entitled to more certain rules to follow, while the same certainty and breadth should attract more safe harbor elections by public charities.

More important, the proposal makes no changes in the 1980 proposal under Section 162(e)(2). That proposal had linked the grassroots lobbying definitions for businesses and for private foundations under color of the 1969 legislative history. When the regulations under Section 4911 were proposed in 1985, they stayed close to the 1980 proposal. Now, without explanation, the linked Sections 4911 and 4945 are delinked from Section 162(e)(2).

There are differences between Section 162(e)(2) and the charity sections that justify some differences in treatment. The former denies a deduction for expenditures "in connection with" lobbying, while the latter sections tend to emphasize the intent behind the expenditure, without using the qualifier "in connection with." Also, Section 162(e)(2) defines grassroots lobbying as influencing the public on "legislative matters," while Sections 4911(d) and 4945(d) refer to "legislation" which is actually defined in Section 4911(e)(2). Thus, the business deduction section does use more broad and vague terminology.

This delinking probably evidences a decision that the "careful balancing" (in the words of the preface) required in the charitable area should dictate a more lenient result than in the commercial area. Without disputing this decision, it does not appear why the same definition of lobbying should not apply to non-electing public charities, except, as noted above, to further encourage the Section 501(h) election.

The New Three-Part Test. (1) The Object of the Communication Is Specific Legislation. Under the 1986 proposal, the communication (whether potentially direct or grassroots lobbying) had only to "pertain[] to legislation being considered by a legislative body, or seek[] or oppose[] legislation." Under the 1988 proposal it must "refer[] to specific legislation," which "includes both legislation that has already been introduced in a legislative body and a specific legislative proposal that the organization either supports or opposes." The impact of the change is best illustrated by the deletion of an example that appeared in the 1986 proposal that found an organization to lobby when it asserted that particular kinds of state tax incentives were needed to solve a particular problem. Apparently no such incentive had been introduced as legislation and the organization had no specific proposal of its own. In the same vein, a communication aimed at promoting "a drug-free America" is not lobbying where that term is not unduly identified with any specific pending legislative proposal regarding drug issues. Conversely, reference to an appropriation for a specific purpose does refer to a specific legislative proposal. Even more obvious, a specific safety code prepared by an organization is a "specific legislative proposal," if promoted to the lawmakers.

(2) The Communication Reflects a View. The 1988 proposal sheds virtually no light on how a view may be reflected, other than by direct endorsement or opposition and by nonpartisan analysis that draws a conclusion about specific legislation. The major change is that a view no longer may be inferred from selective dissemination of a communication expressing no explicit view, to persons reasonably expected to share a common view of the legislation. This inference also had appeared in the 1980 proposal and, as noted above, had an ancestry dating back at least to 28 IRC Secs. 4911(c)(1), 4945(d)(1).

---

29 Cf. IRC Sec. 501(h)(7).
32 1986 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-2(c)(2), Example (2). There was also no call to action in that example.
33 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-2(b)(4)(ii)(A), Example (4). Cf. (B), Example (1) of the same section (referred to "the President's plans for a drug-free America," which had been widely used to describe specific legislation).
1962 in the business context. A similar but more limited inference is retained in connection with the exception for nonpartisan analysis, as will be discussed below.

(3) The Communication Encourages Action. While the foregoing two parts of the lobbying test apply both to direct and grassroots lobbying, the third applies only to grassroots lobbying. Perhaps the most remarkable about-face in the new proposal, in the words of its preface, is that an organization's "communications could advocate or oppose specific legislation and not be considered lobbying, so long as the communications do not encourage the recipients to take action with respect to the legislation." Of course, this expansive view could be negated if "encourage" were broadly defined, but it is not.

Encouraging action requires one of four sorts of action:

(a) specific direction to contact a legislator or related person, for the principal purpose of lobbying;

(b) furnishing the address, telephone number or similar information of a legislator or related person;

(c) furnishing written material that the recipient may send to a legislator or related person, for the principal purpose of facilitating lobbying; or

(d) specific identification of legislators who will vote on the legislation as either opposing the desired view, being undecided, being the recipient's representative, or being on the responsible committee; but not identification of the main sponsors.

The examples provide only modest additional explanation of these fairly straightforward rules. First, encouragement to write to the President counts (a "government official" who may participate in the formulation of legislation"); second, a veiled reference to a particular legislator counts; third, a general reference to "most of the Senators from Farm Belt states" does not count.

As was noticed by the IRS in Rev. Rul. 62-156 and Rev. Rul. 78-111, the reality of the world is that communication recipients can be encouraged to lobby despite the absence from the communication of specific exhortation and specific instruction on whom to contact. The 1988 proposal clearly steps back from the permitted (if not intended) scope of the statutes, for the apparent purpose of drawing a bright line. The presence of one of the four actions listed above fairly clearly should evidence an intent on the part of the organization to prompt lobbying by making the communication.

Finally, the 1988 proposal abandons the prior proposal's distinction between communications addressed to the public versus those addressed to persons in an academic capacity. If the requisite encouragement to act is present, the identity of the audience is irrelevant.

Exceptions to the Lobbying Definition. The four activities that are excluded from the definition of lobbying, as stated in existing Reg. § 53.4945-2(d), are somewhat amplified, as follows.

(1) Making Available the Results of Nonpartisan Analysis, Study or Research. The proposal preface opines that this exception will be less important because fewer communications will be lobbying under the new three-part test. The proposal, like existing Reg. § 53.4945-2(d)(1)(ii), continues to link evaluation of the nonpartisan nature of the analysis to the "educational" definition of Reg. § 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(3), requiring a sufficiently full and fair exposition of the facts to enable the recipient to form an independent conclusion on the issue.

While selective dissemination of the communication no longer will cause a view to be deemed reflected under the general definition of lobbying, as discussed above, it is proposed that existing Reg. § 53.4945-2(d)(1)(iv) and the companion 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-2(c)(1)(iv) will continue to deny the "nonpartisan analysis" exception to the definition of grassroots lobbying when the communication is "limited to, or directed toward, persons who are interested solely in one side of a particular issue." In practice it would seem that nonpartisan analysis is one of 37 1980 Prop. Reg. § 53.4945-2(b)(1)(ii); see Rev. Rul. 62-156, 1962-2 CB 47. Rev. Rul. 78-111, 1978-1 CB 41, may have implicitly applied the concept in the business area, holding that dissemination to shareholders of the corporate president's testimony against proposed legislation that could harm corporate profits constituted grassroots lobbying, despite the lack of a specific suggestion that they contact legislators.

---

39 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-2(b)(4)(ii)(B), Example (3), and (C), Examples (6) and (7).

42 This exception can be traced back to Reg. § 1.501(c)(3)-1(c)(3)(iv), which excludes from the definition of an "action" organization one that carries out nonpartisan analysis in connection with its basic objectives but does not "campaign[] for" the attainment of the objective.
the more common settings in which selective dissemination could have a bearing on identifying a communication as lobbying. This rule appears to suggest that directing nonpartisan information to such a partisan group (presumably including legislators) must indicate an intent to encourage lobbying (or voting by the legislators) and not to educate by helping them reach their own conclusions.

It is uncertain how much of a limitation on the nonpartisan exception this rule has been or will be. It is much narrower than the selective dissemination rule in the 1980 and 1986 general definitions of grassroots lobbying. Here the communication recipients in fact must be "interested solely" in one side, as opposed to "reasonably expected to share a common view." The 1988 proposal repeats Example (4) of existing Reg. § 53.4945-2(d)(1)(v), indicating that a private foundation's bimonthly newsletter on pesticides is not automatically viewed as directed toward persons interested in only one side of the matter.48 The proposal grapples with an issue that is somewhat confused by current Reg. § 1.501 (c)(3)-1(c)(3)(iv) and -1(d)(3)(i), which suggest that in some cases nonpartisan or "educational" analysis may be made available so as to "advocate" a view, without committing the sin of "campaigining" for it. The compromise here is that the communication of nonpartisan analysis may be accompanied by identification of the opposing, undecided or otherwise voting legislators, whereas in conjunction with partisan analysis such information constitutes encouragement to act.48 This exception is accomplished by the exclusion of such identification from the definition of "directly encouraging recipient to take action."

Finally, pure nonpartisan analysis can have a tail, which, when long enough, can drag the cost of the analysis into the cost of grassroots lobbying. This occurs if a nonpartisan analysis is transformed into or later used as part of a lobbying communication.48 In the words of the preface, "in cases of abuse" the cost of the analysis will be counted as part of the lobbying cost if the organization's "primary purpose" in preparing it was for use in lobbying. While "facts and circumstances" will determine the primary purpose, a safe harbor applies if the organization makes a "substantial" nonlobbying distribution of the analysis prior to or contemporaneously with the lobbying distribution.

For example, first making the analysis available to the public at the organization's head-quarters is not a substantial prior distribution, whereas mailing to universities is, where the latter but not the former is a normal pattern of distribution for such reports.48 If the lobbying distribution is made by an unrelated organization, clear and convincing proof will be required to establish that the communication was prepared primarily for lobbying.48 A similar rule applies to subsequent use of an initially nonlobbying, but partisan, communication.48

(2) Examination of Broad Social, Economic and Similar Problems. Existing regulations and the 1988 proposal exclude from the definition of lobbying discussions of broad issues, publicly and with legislators, from the definition of lobbying, even when the general subject also is the subject of pending legislation, so long as they do not address the merits of a "specific legislative proposal" (the same term now proposed to be used in generally defining legislation).49 The 1988 proposal preface observes there is hardly any role left for this exception in view of the narrowed definition of lobbying.

Indeed, in order for the communication to be within the three-part test so that the exception might apply, a communication that did not address the "merits" of specific legislation at least would have to refer to that legislation and reflect a view on it. Unless the preface means the exception is an entirely dead letter, it must be possible for reference to be made to a specific bill that reflects a view but does not address the merits. Such a communication might be: "Pollution is a bad social and economic problem, etc.; Bill No. 152 to limit pollution is pending before the Senate." If so, such a communication is not all that unlikely to happen. It will qualify for the exception only if any accompanying encourage-

48 1988 Prop. Reg. §§ 56.4911-2(c)(1)(vii), Examples (10) and (11). The cost of a model safety code developed and generally distributed by an organization is not a lobbying cost, although the cost of promoting it to legislators can be. 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-2(b)(4)(i), Example (5).
48 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-2(b)(2)(v). Unlike the nonpartisan analysis provision, this provision states that the nonlobbying distribution of a partisan analysis will not be considered "substantial" unless that distribution is at least as extensive as the lobbying distribution.
ment to act falls outside the defined term “directly encourage.” This means that, like nonpartisan analysis, the broad issue communication only may identify opposing, undecided or otherwise voting legislators but not otherwise “encourage” as that term is defined in the three-part test.

(3) Other Exceptions. The proposal continues the exceptions for technical advice given in response to a written request and for “self-defense” lobbying.50

Mass Media Communications. As a counterweight to the otherwise very liberal definition of grassroots lobbying, the proposal creates a new category of communication that falls outside the general lobbying definition, but will be treated as grassroots lobbying: mass media communications. A communication is presumed to be included within this term if it (1) appears in the “mass media,” (2) appears within two weeks before a legislative body (or committee) vote, (3) concerns a “highly publicized” piece of legislation, (4) reflects a view on the general subject of the legislation and (5) either refers to the legislation or encourages the public to communicate with legislators on the general subject of the legislation.51 “Mass media” means television, radio and general circulation newspapers and magazines, with an exception in most cases for those published by the organization. A mass media communication normally would not be lobbying because it does not contain both a reference to specific legislation and an encouragement to act.

The definition of “highly publicized” and the application of the two-week period could cause problems. Since a legislature and particularly a committee may choose to accelerate a vote on a matter at any time, issuance of any mass media communication within any proximity to an expected vote could be risky. Likewise, “highly publicized” means frequently covered by the mass media during the two weeks preceding the vote. It would not be unusual for a communication made in the mass media 13 days before a vote to prompt frequent coverage during the rest of the period. Relief in such cases could lie in the rule that the existence of a mass media communication is a presumption rebuttable by showing that the communication’s timing was unrelated to the upcoming legislative action or was of a type regularly made by the organization.

This rule could be expected to have in t errors effect on charities’ use of the mass media. Could this be motivated by a desire to protect Congress from the deluge of last-minute cards and letters?

Allocation of Costs. The 1980 proposal had applied an “all or nothing” rule to expenses of advertising, any part of which was grassroots lobbying,52 and the 1986 proposal retained and extended that rule to expenditures made both for lobbying and fundraising purposes.53 This approach was consistent with the “in connection with” rule also used in the earlier proposals. The 1986 proposal also created a presumption of all grassroots lobbying where that was mixed with direct lobbying.54

(1) Nonmembership Communications. A communication is “nonmembership” if no more than half of the recipients are members of the organization.55 The costs of the portion of a communication related to fundraising, membership solicitation and discussion unrelated to the lobbying communication are excluded from the lobbying costs of mixed purpose nonmembership communications.56 The complexity lies in the determination of what is unrelated, or in the words of the proposal, not “on the same specific subject as the lobbying message.” A portion is on the same subject if it (1) discusses an activity or specific issue that would be directly affected by the proposed legislation, (2) discusses the background or consequences of the proposed legislation, or (3) discusses the background or consequences of an activity or specific issue affected by the proposed legislation. For example, a document that discusses the need for child care in one part and endorses a bill providing child care in another part is entirely a lobbying communication.57

The examples encourage the use of separate newspaper advertisements and separate letters within one envelope as approved methods to simplify the allocation of cost between lobbying and nonlobbying communications.58

(2) Membership Communications. Section 4911 (d)(2)(D) specifically exempts from lobbying those communications between an organization and its “bona fide members” concerning even specific legislation, so long as members are not 50 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-2(c)(3) and (4).

56 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-3(a)(2)(i); -3(b), Example (4).
57 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-3(b), Example (8).
58 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-3(b), Examples (5) and (11).
directly encouraged to act. The proposal preface states that the regulations will continue to limit this permission strictly to members and not just supporters, as indicated by the clarity of the statutory language. Also, as with nonpartisan analysis and the discussion of broad issues, members may be informed of the names of undecided, opposing or otherwise voting legislators, without being deemed to be encouraged to act.\textsuperscript{38}

Costs of mixed-purpose membership communication must be subjected to a "reasonable allocation."\textsuperscript{39} The only explanation of this rule is that a reasonable allocation does not include a segregation of only the cost of a specific sentence that encourages action. This flexibility is illustrated, however, by two pairs of examples that approve a 50:50 allocation for a membership communication but require more exact line counting or characterization of related information as part of the lobbying, for similar nonmember communications.\textsuperscript{40} On the other hand, Example (3) of Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-3(b) requires the same allocation as in identical Example (2), concerning nonmember communications, where the lobbying segmentation of the communication was clear.

(3) Mixed Direct and Grassroots Lobbying. The differentiation of grassroots from direct lobbying is important under Section 4911 because the amount of expenditure that may escape excise taxation is 75 percent less for grassroots lobbying than for direct lobbying.\textsuperscript{41} A mixed nonmember communication will be treated as all grassroots except to the extent the organization demonstrates that it was made primarily for direct lobbying purposes, in which case a reasonable allocation should be made.\textsuperscript{42}

A membership communication of an electing public charity may be direct or grassroots lobbying, depending on whether the member is encouraged to interact directly with the legislator or to encourage others to act.\textsuperscript{43} Where the communication sends to the member a petition with a page of signature blocks or several tear-off postcards addressed to a legislator, it is presumed to be a grassroots communication.\textsuperscript{44}

Other Changes and Rules to Note. (1) Regulations and Other Administrative Action. New examples make clear that lobbying does not include communications regarding administrative rule-making, even when a legislator is lobbied to that encourages action. This rule's flexibility is illus- help.\textsuperscript{45} Neither does it include other efforts to cause executive and administrative personnel to take action, so long as the effort is not principally to encourage them to lobby as by promoting the legislative appropriation of funds.\textsuperscript{46}

(2) Testimony and Grassroots Lobbying. The concern that testimony before a legislative committee might turn into grassroots lobbying due to press coverage is eliminated by the almost inevitable absence from such testimony of any encouragement of the indirect grassroots recipient to take action.

(3) Foundation Grants to Electing Public Charities. The rules are relaxed, including particularly authorization to rely on the grantee's assertions about use of the funds, unless there is cause to doubt it.\textsuperscript{47}

(4) Effective Date. Unlike the 1986 proposal, which would have used an effective date retroactive to 1976, this proposal will become effective for the tax years beginning after publication of final regulations.

Conclusion

The 1988 proposal is effectively the third effort of the Treasury in nine years to draft regulations in the lobbying area that will satisfy the highly vocal charitable sector. The "careful balancing" referred to in the preface also could be called an exquisitely painful constitutional and political tension between the needs of charities and the desire of Congress sometimes to be left alone. The proposal provides a reasonable measure of certainty and flexibility and should pass into final form relatively unchanged.\textsuperscript{48}

\textsuperscript{38} 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-5(b)(4); -5(f)(6).
\textsuperscript{39} 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-3(a)(2)(ii); -5(f)(8).
\textsuperscript{40} 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-3(b), Examples (4) and (6) and Examples (8) and (9).
\textsuperscript{41} IRC Sec. 4911(e)(4).
\textsuperscript{42} 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-3(a)(3).
\textsuperscript{43} IRC Sec. 4911(d)(3).
\textsuperscript{45} 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-2(b)(4)(i), Examples (2) and (4).
\textsuperscript{46} 1988 Prop. Reg. § 56.4911-2(e)(4); -2(b)(2)(iii)(A); -2(b)(4)(ii)(B), Example (3).
\textsuperscript{48} Early comment is favorable. See 42 Tax Notes 149 (January 9, 1989). The proposal preface hints, however, that further modification to the identification of methods of encouraging recipients to act may be necessary.