Keeping dreams

we landed on your shores not to steal, scorn, rape we did not arrive sardine-tight, tear full dehydrated cargoes on fishing boats though some came by treacherous means, their deeds spilling trickery we arrived without shackles but we’ve tripped over death ruthless politicians just the same we did not come in greed rather with hands opened wide to a dream we came because we were as good as any to carry the baton or win the gold

we listened when told we were deserving back home black was never mentioned there was no reason for distinction we came because we were paid for, whereas there are no payment for blood we might have given you our hidden pains but that was to make us better Calabash

pride strong it was never our desire to stand in your lines or suck the life from your over-burdened system we became a punch line for comedians about our many jobs held hands always clasped tight in prayer because our children, our children's children our parents, grandparents, a whole village was hinging on our survival we dream of telling them you treated us well that you afforded us a room with a view of the future we did not come to ravish but sometimes we fall in love and love demands all there is giving everything it has
